RESPONSE REPORT TO THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL

Re: Allegation of Vote-Authorization Fraud — Clarification of Complaint and Correlation to Federal Internal Control Reporting

Date:	April 8, 2026
Prepared By:	Brian Michael Frost
Submitted To:	Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General (DOJ-OIG) DOJ-OIG Hotline / Office of the Inspector General
Reference:	DOJ-OIG Hotline Complaint Submission; OMB Circular A-123; Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (FMFIA), 31 U.S.C. § 3512
Classification:	UNCLASSIFIED // FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY

I. Executive Summary

The purpose of this report is to formally clarify, document, and preserve the nature and substance of the complainant's allegation of "vote-authorization fraud" as submitted to the Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General (DOJ-OIG) via its Hotline complaint mechanism. This clarification is necessary because the terminology employed in the original complaint — specifically, the phrase "vote-authorization fraud" — is susceptible to mischaracterization or conflation with allegations of electoral or ballot-related vote fraud. Such conflation would be factually and legally erroneous, and would impede the OIG's ability to properly categorize, investigate, and disposition the complaint.

As used in this complaint, the term "vote" does not refer to the casting of ballots in a public election. Rather, it refers to the authorization vote — that is, the official signature, approval, assurance action, or certification — required of federal officials under Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Circular No. A-123, "Management's Responsibility for Internal Control," and the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (FMFIA), codified at 31 U.S.C. § 3512(c) and (d). The A-123 assurance statement is a formal declaration by which an agency head or responsible federal official attests to the adequacy and effectiveness of the agency's internal controls over operations, reporting, and compliance. This assurance constitutes an official "vote of confidence" in the integrity of federal management systems and carries the full weight of legal accountability.

The allegation at issue concerns potential fraud, misrepresentation, or material weakness in the A-123 assurance signature process — specifically, the interaction between the assurance statement signed by Russell T. Vought, in his capacity as Director of the Office of Management and Budget (serving from January 2, 2019, through January 20, 2021), and official DOJ correspondence signed by Richard C. Sofield. The complainant alleges that the authorization chain connecting these two official actions may contain material deficiencies that warrant OIG examination. This report provides the regulatory and legal framework for the allegation, draws a clear distinction between vote-authorization fraud and electoral vote fraud, and requests that the DOJ-OIG accept, properly categorize, and investigate this complaint on the merits.

II. Statement of Allegation

The complainant, Brian Michael Frost, hereby formally states the following allegation for submission to the Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General:

The A-123 assurance signature rendered by Russell T. Vought, in his capacity as Director (and, prior thereto, Acting Director) of the Office of Management and Budget during the period from January 2, 2019, through January 20, 2021, may have been executed in a manner that did not fully comply with the requirements of OMB Circular No. A-123, "Management's Responsibility for Internal Control," and/or the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (FMFIA), as codified at 31 U.S.C. § 3512(c) and (d). Specifically, the complainant alleges that the assurance statements provided or overseen by Director Vought during his tenure may have contained material misrepresentations, omitted disclosure of known material weaknesses, or otherwise failed to satisfy the statutory and regulatory requirements for the annual assessment and reporting of internal control effectiveness across the executive branch.

Further, the complainant alleges that official Department of Justice correspondence signed by Richard C. Sofield may interact with, reference, rely upon, or be informed by such A-123 assurance representations in a manner that creates a dependent authorization chain. If the underlying assurance was materially deficient, then DOJ actions and communications predicated upon that assurance may themselves be compromised, warranting independent OIG review to determine the accuracy and integrity of the information conveyed.

The term "vote-authorization fraud," as employed in this complaint, is defined as follows: The word "vote" refers to the act of an authorized federal official casting an official approval, assurance, certification, or authorization — analogous to a vote to certify the adequacy and effectiveness of internal controls within the meaning of OMB Circular A-123 and the FMFIA. This is the same functional concept as a board member voting to approve financial statements or a certifying officer signing an attestation of compliance. The word "fraud" in this context refers to any material misrepresentation, knowing omission, failure to disclose material weaknesses, or deliberate circumvention of established internal control assessment procedures in connection with the assurance process. Together, "vote-authorization fraud" describes a category of misconduct in which the official authorization or assurance mechanism — the "vote" — is rendered fraudulently or in a manner that does not accurately represent the true state of internal controls.

The complainant emphasizes, with the utmost clarity, that this allegation is grounded entirely in federal internal control law and regulation. It pertains to the integrity of the A-123 assurance process and the federal authorization chain. It does not pertain to, and has no connection whatsoever with, electoral processes, ballot fraud, voter suppression, or any matter governed by election law.

III. Regulatory and Legal Framework

A. OMB Circular No. A-123: Management's Responsibility for Internal Control

OMB Circular No. A-123 provides guidance to federal agencies regarding establishing, maintaining, and assessing internal control over operations, reporting, and compliance. Originally issued pursuant to the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (Pub. L. 97-255), the Circular was substantially revised on December 21, 2004, to strengthen requirements for management's assessment of internal control over financial reporting, drawing upon principles analogous to those established for publicly traded companies under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002. The Circular has been further updated in subsequent years, including a July 15, 2016, revision and additional guidance issued in the 2025–2026 period.

Under A-123, each federal agency is required to establish and maintain effective internal control systems that provide reasonable assurance that programs achieve their intended goals and objectives, that agency business processes operate efficiently and effectively, that the agency complies with applicable laws and regulations, that federal assets are safeguarded, and that the agency produces reliable financial and performance information. Annually, agency management must assess and report on the effectiveness of internal controls, providing assurances in the agency's Performance and Accountability Report (PAR) or Agency Financial Report (AFR). These assurances must include information regarding identified material weaknesses and corrective actions. The assurance statement is, in functional terms, a formal declaration — a "vote of confidence" — that the agency's internal controls meet the statutory requirements established by Congress. The authority for this requirement is codified at 31 U.S.C. § 3512(c) and (d), as implemented by the Government Performance and Results Act (GPRA) Modernization Act of 2010 (Pub. L. 111-352).

B. Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (FMFIA)

The Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (Pub. L. 97-255), codified at 31 U.S.C. § 3512(c) and (d), requires the head of each executive agency to establish internal accounting and administrative controls that conform to standards prescribed by the Comptroller General, and to prepare an annual statement to the President and Congress. This annual statement must either provide reasonable assurance that the agency's internal controls comply with the requirements of the Act, or identify any material weaknesses in the agency's controls and describe the corrective action plans developed to remediate those weaknesses. The FMFIA thus establishes a legal obligation for agency heads to personally attest — to effectively "vote" their professional judgment and authority — that the internal controls under their stewardship are adequate. A false, misleading, or materially incomplete assurance statement under the FMFIA represents a failure to meet a statutory obligation and may constitute a basis for oversight action, investigation, or other accountability measures.

C. The Role of the OMB Director

The Director of the Office of Management and Budget serves as the principal federal official responsible for overseeing the implementation of OMB Circular A-123 across the executive branch. In this capacity, the OMB Director establishes the guidelines that agencies must follow in assessing and reporting on internal controls, reviews agency compliance with A-123 requirements, and may issue directives, memoranda, or certifications that interact with and inform agency-level assurance statements. During the period relevant to this complaint — January 2, 2019, through January 20, 2021 — Russell T. Vought served in this role, first as Acting Director (January 2, 2019, through July 22, 2020) and subsequently as confirmed Director (July 22, 2020, through January 20, 2021). As OMB Director, Vought bore direct responsibility for ensuring the integrity of the A-123 framework and the accuracy of the assurance process government-wide. Any action or omission by the OMB Director that undermined the reliability of the A-123 assurance process during this period would have implications for every agency's internal control reporting.

D. DOJ Correspondence and the Role of Richard C. Sofield

Official correspondence issued by the Department of Justice and signed by Richard C. Sofield constitutes agency action or communication that may rely upon, reference, or be informed by A-123 assurance representations. In the federal authorization chain, official correspondence does not exist in isolation; it is part of a broader framework of internal controls, management assurances, and compliance representations that together form the basis for agency decision-making and external communication. If the A-123 assurance underlying DOJ operations was materially deficient during the period in question, then any official DOJ correspondence predicated upon, informed by, or issued within the context of that deficient assurance may itself warrant scrutiny to determine whether it conveyed materially accurate information and whether the authorization chain supporting that correspondence was sound.

IV. Clarification — Vote-Authorization Fraud vs. Electoral Vote Fraud

This section draws a clear, unambiguous, and definitive distinction between the two concepts that share the word "vote" but are entirely separate in law, fact, and substance. The failure to maintain this distinction would constitute a fundamental misunderstanding of the complaint and could result in improper categorization, misdirected investigation, or dismissal of a meritorious allegation on erroneous grounds.

Vote-Authorization Fraud, as that term is used in this complaint and throughout this report, refers to fraud in the federal authorization and assurance process. It describes misconduct in which a federal official, charged with the responsibility of certifying, approving, or attesting to the adequacy of internal controls, compliance, or other federal management functions, renders that official "vote" — that is, the signature, assurance statement, or certification — in a manner that is fraudulent, materially misleading, or knowingly incomplete. This category of fraud is governed by OMB Circular No. A-123, the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 (31 U.S.C. § 3512), and related internal control statutes and regulations. The "vote" in this context is the official act of authorization — the functional equivalent of a board member voting to approve a financial statement, a certifying officer signing a funds availability certification, or an agency head signing an annual assurance statement. The "fraud" is any material misrepresentation, omission, or failure to disclose material weaknesses in connection with that official act.

Electoral Vote Fraud, by contrast, refers to fraud in the electoral process — the illegal manipulation of ballots, voter suppression, interference with the counting of votes in public elections, or other unlawful conduct designed to alter the outcome of an election. Electoral vote fraud is governed by an entirely separate body of law, including the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (Pub. L. 107-252), the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (as amended), the National Voter Registration Act of 1993, and the election laws of the several states. Electoral vote fraud involves the participation of citizens in democratic elections and the integrity of the ballot box. It has no connection to federal internal control assessment, A-123 assurance statements, or the authorization processes of the executive branch.

The complainant states, clearly and for the record, that the allegation contained in this complaint pertains exclusively to vote-authorization fraud — fraud in the official assurance and authorization process — and has absolutely no connection to electoral processes, ballot fraud, the 2020 presidential election, or any other matter governed by election law. Any characterization of this complaint as pertaining to electoral vote fraud would be factually incorrect, legally inapposite, and would constitute a misunderstanding of the complaint's substance that could impede proper OIG review and disposition. The complainant respectfully requests that the OIG take affirmative steps to ensure that this complaint is categorized and handled in accordance with its actual substance — as an allegation of fraud in the federal internal control and authorization process — and that it not be dismissed, redirected, or deprioritized on the basis of any erroneous association with electoral fraud allegations.

V. The A-123 Assurance Signature — Russell T. Vought

Russell Thurlow Vought served as the principal official responsible for OMB Circular A-123 implementation and oversight across the executive branch during the period relevant to this complaint. Vought was nominated by President Donald J. Trump to serve as Deputy Director of the Office of Management and Budget in April 2017 and was confirmed by the United States Senate on February 28, 2018. Following the departure of Director Mick Mulvaney, Vought assumed the role of Acting Director of OMB on January 2, 2019. He served in an acting capacity until his confirmation as Director on July 22, 2020, and continued to serve as Director until January 20, 2021. Throughout this period — spanning more than two years — Vought was the senior federal official charged with establishing A-123 guidelines, overseeing agency compliance with internal control requirements, and ensuring the integrity of the assurance process across the executive branch.

Under OMB Circular A-123, the annual assurance process requires agency heads to assess the effectiveness of internal controls and to provide a formal assurance statement in their agency's Performance and Accountability Report or Agency Financial Report. The OMB Director oversees this process, establishes the standards and guidelines that agencies must follow, and may issue directives or certifications that interact with and inform agency-level assurance statements. The assurance statement — the "vote" of authorization — carries legal weight under 31 U.S.C. § 3512 and creates personal accountability for the accuracy and completeness of the assurance. When an agency head or the OMB Director signs or oversees an assurance statement, that official is attesting, under legal obligation, that the internal controls within the scope of the assurance are effective and that any material weaknesses have been identified and disclosed. This attestation is not merely administrative; it is a legal act with consequences under the FMFIA and related accountability frameworks.

The concern raised by the complainant is as follows: If the A-123 assurance provided or overseen by Russell T. Vought during his tenure as Acting Director and Director of OMB contained material misrepresentations, omitted known weaknesses, or failed to comply with the statutory and regulatory requirements for internal control assessment and reporting, this would constitute a potential violation of the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act and a breach of the internal control framework that the A-123 assurance process is designed to protect. Such a violation would not be a mere procedural irregularity; it would represent a fundamental failure of the authorization mechanism — a fraudulent "vote" — that could undermine the integrity of internal control reporting across every agency subject to A-123 requirements during the period in question. The complainant requests that the OIG examine this matter with the seriousness it warrants.

VI. DOJ Correspondence — Richard C. Sofield

The complainant's concern extends to official Department of Justice correspondence signed by Richard C. Sofield. The specific nature of this concern is that such correspondence may rely upon, reference, or be informed by A-123 assurance representations that were potentially deficient during the period covered by Russell T. Vought's tenure as OMB Director. Official DOJ correspondence does not exist in a vacuum; it is issued within an institutional framework that presumes the integrity of the internal controls and assurance processes governing the Department's operations. When a federal official signs official correspondence on behalf of the Department of Justice, that action implicitly depends upon the soundness of the authorization chain — including the A-123 assurance — that underpins the Department's management, reporting, and compliance functions.

If the A-123 assurance statements that were in effect during the relevant period did not accurately reflect the state of internal controls — if, in other words, the "vote" of assurance was rendered fraudulently or in a materially incomplete manner — then official DOJ correspondence predicated upon, or issued within the context of, that deficient assurance may itself have conveyed materially inaccurate information or may have been issued without the sound authorization foundation that federal internal control requirements are designed to guarantee. The complainant does not assert that Richard C. Sofield personally participated in or was aware of any deficiency in the A-123 assurance process. Rather, the concern is systemic: that the authorization chain connecting the Vought A-123 assurance to the Sofield DOJ correspondence may contain a material break, and that this break warrants OIG examination.

Accordingly, the complainant requests that the OIG examine the interaction between the A-123 assurance signed or overseen by Russell T. Vought and the DOJ correspondence signed by Richard C. Sofield to determine whether the authorization chain was sound, whether the "vote" of assurance was properly rendered, and whether the DOJ correspondence at issue was supported by a valid and compliant internal control framework.

VII. January 6, 2021 — Contextual Correlation

On January 6, 2021, the United States Capitol was breached during the joint session of Congress convened to certify the results of the Electoral College in the 2020 presidential election. The breach resulted in significant disruption to federal operations, physical damage to the Capitol complex, injuries to law enforcement officers and others, and the deaths of several individuals. The events of that day prompted multiple federal investigations, congressional inquiries, and oversight reviews by inspectors general and the Government Accountability Office. The January 6 events represented one of the most significant disruptions to the federal government's operations in modern history and exposed critical failures in information sharing, threat assessment, and internal controls across multiple federal agencies.

The events of January 6, 2021, occurred during Russell T. Vought's tenure as Director of the Office of Management and Budget. Vought served as OMB Director until January 20, 2021 — fourteen days after the Capitol breach. The period surrounding these events was one of heightened scrutiny of federal authorization processes, internal controls, and the integrity of official assurances across the executive branch. The institutional environment in which the A-123 assurance at issue was rendered was, as subsequent oversight findings have confirmed, one in which federal internal controls were demonstrably under stress and, in multiple documented instances, failed to meet established standards.

The Government Accountability Office, in Report GAO-23-106625, "Capitol Attack: Federal Agencies Identified Some Threats, but Did Not Fully Process and Share Information Prior to January 6, 2021" (published February 28, 2023, and reissued with revisions on July 21, 2023), found that all ten federal agencies reviewed by GAO had identified potential threats of violence prior to January 6, but that some agencies either did not follow their established policies or procedures for reviewing the threats, or did not share critical information with partners responsible for planning security measures. Specifically, GAO found that the FBI and the Department of Homeland Security's Office of Intelligence and Analysis did not consistently follow agency policies or procedures for processing tips or potential threats because they lacked controls to ensure compliance with policies. The GAO report identified internal control deficiencies as a root cause of the failure to fully process and share threat information and made recommendations to five agencies to improve their controls. These findings are directly relevant to the complainant's allegation: they demonstrate that during the period covered by the A-123 assurance at issue, federal internal controls were, in fact, deficient in material respects — precisely the condition that the A-123 assurance process is designed to identify and disclose.

The United States Capitol Police Office of Inspector General, in Report 2021-I-0003-A, "Review of the Events Surrounding the January 6, 2021, Takeover of the U.S. Capitol" (February 26, 2021), similarly reviewed internal controls, policies, and compliance surrounding the events and identified significant operational and control deficiencies. These findings further corroborate the existence of systemic internal control weaknesses during the period relevant to this complaint.

The DOJ-OIG itself conducted an extensive review of the FBI's handling of its confidential human sources (CHS) and intelligence collection efforts in the lead-up to January 6, 2021. The resulting report, published in December 2024 (Oversight and Review Division Report 25-011), found that while the FBI took significant steps to prepare for its supporting role, the Bureau did not canvass its field offices for intelligence from confidential human sources prior to January 6 — a step that FBI Deputy Director Paul Abbate described as "a basic step that was missed." The report also identified confusion and lack of coordination that contributed to inaccurate reporting to Congress regarding whether such a canvass had occurred. These findings demonstrate that even within the Department of Justice itself, internal controls and compliance with established procedures were not functioning as required during the period at issue.

The complainant draws the following correlation: The allegation of vote-authorization fraud — fraud in the official assurance and authorization process governed by A-123 and the FMFIA — arose in a temporal and institutional context where federal internal controls were demonstrably under stress and, in multiple documented instances, failed. The January 6 events and the subsequent oversight findings by GAO, the USCP OIG, and the DOJ-OIG confirm that internal control deficiencies existed across multiple agencies during the same period covered by the A-123 assurance at issue in this complaint. This correlation supports the relevance, timeliness, and credibility of the complainant's allegation. If federal internal controls were failing in the specific, documented ways identified by these oversight bodies, then the A-123 assurance statement — the official "vote" that those controls were adequate — must be examined to determine whether it accurately represented the state of internal controls or whether it constituted a material misrepresentation.

The complainant emphasizes, once again and with the utmost clarity, that this report does NOT allege electoral fraud related to the 2020 presidential election or the January 6 events themselves. The January 6 events are referenced solely for the purpose of establishing the temporal and institutional context in which the alleged vote-authorization fraud occurred. The institutional environment of internal control failure illuminated by those events is the same environment in which the A-123 assurance at issue was rendered, and it is that environment — not the electoral context — that gives rise to the complainant's concern.

VIII. Request for OIG Action

The complainant, Brian Michael Frost, respectfully requests that the Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, take the following actions in connection with this complaint:

1. Accept and Properly Categorize This Complaint. The OIG is requested to accept this complaint and categorize it as pertaining to vote-authorization fraud — that is, fraud in the federal internal control and assurance process governed by OMB Circular A-123 and the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 — and not as pertaining to electoral vote fraud or any election-related matter.
2. Examine the A-123 Assurance Signature of Russell T. Vought. The OIG is requested to examine the A-123 assurance signature and related actions taken by Russell T. Vought during his tenure as Acting Director and Director of the Office of Management and Budget (January 2, 2019, through January 20, 2021) to determine whether such assurances complied with the requirements of OMB Circular A-123 and the FMFIA, and whether they accurately represented the state of internal controls across the executive branch.
3. Examine DOJ Correspondence Signed by Richard C. Sofield. The OIG is requested to examine official Department of Justice correspondence signed by Richard C. Sofield to determine whether such correspondence relied upon, referenced, or was informed by potentially deficient A-123 assurances, and whether it conveyed materially accurate information.
4. Assess the Authorization Chain. The OIG is requested to assess whether the interaction between the Vought A-123 assurance and the Sofield DOJ correspondence constitutes a material breakdown in the federal authorization chain, and whether that breakdown resulted in the issuance of official DOJ communications that were not supported by a sound internal control framework.

5. Consider the Temporal and Institutional Correlation. The OIG is requested to consider the temporal and institutional correlation between the alleged vote-authorization fraud and the January 6, 2021, events, including the internal control deficiencies identified by GAO (Report GAO-23-106625), the USCP OIG (Report 2021-I-0003-A), and the DOJ-OIG (Report 25-011 on FBI CHS handling), in evaluating the relevance and credibility of this complaint.

The complainant is prepared to provide additional documentation, testimony, or clarification as the OIG may require in furtherance of its review. The complainant is committed to full cooperation with the OIG and to supporting the integrity of the federal oversight process.

IX. Conclusion

This report has been prepared to formally clarify, document, and preserve the substance of the complainant's allegation of vote-authorization fraud as submitted to the Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General. The core distinction upon which this complaint rests is clear and unambiguous: vote-authorization fraud, as used herein, refers to fraud in the official assurance and authorization process governed by OMB Circular A-123 and the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982 — not to electoral vote fraud or any matter related to public elections.

The A-123 assurance signature is a legal act carrying accountability under 31 U.S.C. § 3512. Its interaction with official DOJ correspondence signed by Richard C. Sofield raises questions about the integrity of the federal authorization chain that warrant careful OIG examination. The temporal and institutional context — a period during which federal internal controls were demonstrably failing, as documented by GAO, USCP OIG, and DOJ-OIG oversight reports — underscores the relevance and seriousness of this allegation.

The complainant affirms his commitment to transparency, accountability, and the integrity of federal internal controls. The A-123 assurance process exists to protect the public interest by ensuring that federal agencies are managed effectively, that taxpayer resources are safeguarded, and that Congress and the public can rely upon the representations of executive branch officials. When that process fails — when the "vote" of assurance is rendered fraudulently or without due diligence — the consequences extend across the entire federal enterprise. The complainant respectfully thanks the Office of the Inspector General for its attention to this matter and for its continued dedication to oversight, accountability, and the rule of law.
